

SUMMARY OF EXPECTED TESTIMONY OF
ROBYN S. SHAPIRO, J.D.

Robyn Shapiro is an attorney at law specializing in bioethics issues. She is a partner in the law firm of Drinker Biddle Gardner Carton and has held academic positions regarding the study of bioethics, membership on government committees regarding health law issues, membership on American Bar Association committees regarding bioethics, and has authored published articles regarding bioethical issues. She has been a board member of the American Society for Bioethics and Humanities. Ms. Shapiro's educational background, work experiences, memberships, publications, and other experiences and credentials are described in her Curriculum Vitae, a copy of which is attached. The testimony and opinions of Ms. Shapiro will be based upon her educational background, work experiences, knowledge of the relevant medical literature, knowledge of bioethics issues, and review of the relevant records, documents, and depositions in this case. Her opinions will be expressed to a reasonable degree of certainty.

Ms. Shapiro will testify about the professional field known as "bioethics." She will explain that bioethics specialists come from a variety of backgrounds, including philosophy, medicine, law, sociology, religion, and others. She will explain that no accreditation is required of those who hold themselves out as bioethics specialists.

Ms. Shapiro will testify about the claims that have been asserted against the University of Minnesota IRB in this lawsuit. She will testify in opposition to any testimony or evidence suggesting that the University of Minnesota IRB was negligent with regard to the CAFÉ Study. Ms. Shapiro will testify that the University of Minnesota IRB acted reasonably and in conformity with the requirements of federal law when it reviewed, approved, monitored, and took actions regarding the CAFÉ Study at the University of Minnesota. Also, Ms. Shapiro will disagree with any testimony from plaintiff's experts, including but not limited to Paul R. Wolpe, Ph.D., suggesting that the University of Minnesota and/or the University of Minnesota IRB violated any bioethical standard of care or principles of bioethics.

Ms. Shapiro will testify that the University of Minnesota IRB was properly constituted in accordance with the requirements of federal law, and the IRB used proper procedures for reviewing the application and supporting documents for requesting approval to use human subjects in the CAFÉ Study at the University of Minnesota. She will also testify that with regard to the CAFÉ Study the consent document approved by the University of Minnesota IRB complied with the mandates and requirements of federal law.

Ms. Shapiro will testify that it is not usual or customary practice for an IRB to mandate that consent from a potential human research subject be obtained by someone other than that person's treating physician. She will testify that although there have been some writings suggesting this procedure as an available approach that can be used, federal law does not mandate such an approach when a principal investigator is a treating physician of a potential human research subject, and it is not customary practice for an IRB to mandate that someone other than the PI obtain informed consent in these circumstances.

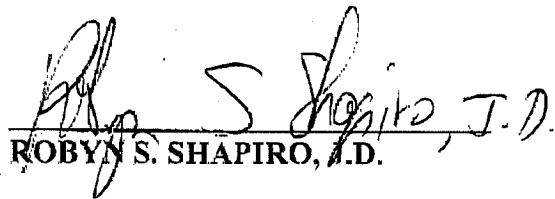

Ms. Shapiro will testify that the processes used at the University of Minnesota and by the University of Minnesota IRB regarding potential conflicts of interest were reasonable, compliant with federal regulations, and compliant with the usual and customary standards of similar organizations. She will point out that all faculty members are required to make self-disclosures, and she will state that this is a reasonable and appropriate procedure. She will testify that the use of a "conflict management review committee" was a procedure that was over and above the customary and standard practices among IRBs at that time. She will testify that the post-approval monitoring program utilized by the University of Minnesota IRB was as rigorous a process as used by other IRBs.

Ms. Shapiro will testify that according to federal guidelines people are presumed to be capable of providing informed consent. She will point out that in the CAFÉ Study at the University of Minnesota a competency evaluation procedure was used with regard to potential human research subjects. She will testify that this was a very reasonable and appropriate procedure. Ms. Shapiro will point out that the CAFÉ Study did not involve the use of any placebos, but instead involved the use of three medications which were available for use in the private sector in the care and treatment of patients with psychosis. Ms. Shapiro will testify that the University of Minnesota IRB had a reasonable and appropriate system in place for healthcare professionals involved in clinical research to report significant adverse events.

Ms. Shapiro will testify about the Declaration of Helsinki. She will point out that the United States Government has never adopted the Declaration of Helsinki or incorporated the Declaration of Helsinki into the federal regulations applicable to research involving human subjects. She will testify that, as noted above, it is not customary for an IRB to mandate that consent from a potential human research subject be obtained from some healthcare professional other than that person's treating physician.

Ms. Shapiro will testify about the concept of therapeutic misconception. She will testify that the consent form used in the CAFÉ Study in November 2003 reasonably and adequately addressed issues relating to possible therapeutic misconception. She will also explain that issues relating to possible therapeutic misconception are less concerning in a situation like the CAFÉ Study since no placebo was used and the patient's dose of the study medication could be adjusted in response to the patient's symptoms and needs.

Ms. Shapiro reserves the right to amend and/or supplement her opinions as more information becomes available.
